"My work is about creating meaningful places – with people, for people – where architecture and interior exist in perfect harmony."

Lyanne has been working as an interior architect at Mecanoo since 2015, contributing to a diverse range of projects, including offices, libraries, care facilities, cultural buildings and mobility-related projects. She collaborates closely with clients and specialist consultants to develop integrated design solutions in which aesthetics and technical performance come together.

Her expertise includes the design of activity-based working environments, as well as large-scale renovation and transformation projects. She sees the adaptive reuse of existing buildings as an opportunity to create sustainable environments that preserve their original essence. With a strong understanding of users and their needs, Lyanne translates complex briefs into clear and distinctive interior concepts. She has a particular talent for visualising design ideas and developing strong concepts that can be consistently carried through from the early design stages to detailed execution.

Materials, colour, furniture, lighting, acoustics and tactility are key elements in her work. She carefully considers how these elements respond to the character of the building and its users, creating healthy and comfortable environments that support wellbeing. Her affinity with technical aspects, including building physics, enables her to balance comfort with feasibility and long-term performance.
